Introduction vii

1 Scope 1

2 Normative references 1

3 Terms and definitions 2

4 Conformance 3

6 Introduction to individualization 4
6.1 The role of individualization 4
6.2 When to provide the capability for individualization 5
6.3 Limitations on the provision of individualization 6
6.4 Initiation of individualization 6

7 General guidance on individualization 6
7.1 Accessibility 6
7.2 Controllability 7
7.3 Detectability 8
7.4 Consistency 9
7.5 Usability of individualization results and features 9

8 Stages of individualization 9
8.1 Initiation of individualization 9
8.2 Deciding on individualization actions 10
8.3 Changing system and context 11

9 Configuration, settings and defaults 11
9.1 Configuration and reconfiguration 11
9.2 Usability of configuration and reconfiguration 12
9.3 Guided configuration and reconfiguration 14
9.4 Default settings 15

10 Supporting individual users 16
10.1 User profiles 16
10.2 User management of profiles 17
10.3 Automatic profile acquisition 18
10.4 Portability of profiles 19
10.5 Providing training and help on use individualization 19

11 Individualizing interface components 20
11.1 General guidance on individualizing interface components 20
11.2 Individualizing visual media 21
11.3 Individualizing auditory media 22
11.4 Individualizing tactile media 22
11.5 Individualizing temporal aspects of media 23

12 Individualizing interaction activities 23

12.1 Supporting user creation and use of stored interaction sequences 23
12.2 Providing user control of security options 24
12.3 User guidance 24
12.4 On-line help 24

13 Individualizing content 25
13.1 General 25
13.2 Cultural and linguistic variations 26

Annex B (informative) Factors to consider when designing individualizations 28

Annex C (informative) Sample procedure for assessing applicability and conformance 36
